

About "The Cove" – Where did it all start?

In the 1700's locals began to gather stone for use as a building material from an area known as Mill Hill. During the early part of this century the granite stone was quarried commercially. In 1958 work stopped and the quarry filled with natural spring water. Now known as Stoney Cove the lake has matured with its green trees and sparkling water and visitors often assume this oasis was formed by nature.

Stoney Cove is one of the busiest diving centres in the world, with in excess of 50,000 visitors each year. Stoney Cove Marine take great care to provide first class facilities and services to support their visitors' needs from novice divers to commercial customers with submarine vehicles.

Situated at 248ft above sea level, Stoney Cove has an area of water covering approximately 12.5 acres with terraced depths of 6m, 20m and 35m. It is true that the water contains an aircraft, a Wessex helicopter and a large Tug "The Stanegarth", which, along with many other items, have been installed in the lake for visiting divers
